The Saskatchewan District Court, the Divisional sittings of which are held here, was opened by Judge Tait on Tuesday morning and as it did not close until late on Friday afternoon, no report of its proceedings could be given this week. In any case there was little business transacted of interest to the public.

On Wednesday morning the steamer North West with the Queen's Own and Midland Battalions and the Marquis with the 6th and 7th Cavalry, arrived at the H. B. Co's landing to take on wood. Later in the morning the Baroness with the 65th Battalion did likewise. The scene presented by the troops was one which probably Prince Albert will never witness again, and it is to be devoutly hoped that the presence of such a body of soldiers may never more be necessary. The men were all in excellent spirits at the prospect of getting home, and we fully sympathize with them. We once more record our conviction that the whole Dominion may justly feel proud of them, and re-assured that they have done all they were allowed to do, and carried themselves like veteran troops, we wish them a pleasant journey home, and the enjoyment of their well earned laurels.

REPRESENTATION.

There must be ample ground for reflection afforded the Government by the now suppressed Rebellion in the Territories, nor can it be supposed that any feature will be brought more clearly into view than the utter hopelessness of trying to govern so large and important a dependency from a distance. The difficulties incidental to handling a Territory in which the increase of settlement has been unprecedentedly rapid, and yet so small when compared with the vast extent of country to be occupied, we have always admitted. That all their efforts should have been directed to the completion of the great railway work undertaken is also very natural, and we can not help the impression that upon the whole what has happened has been the result of the very nature of circumstances, than of any deliberate neglect or misgovernment. The question which presents itself with greatest force to nineteenth century settlers is not as to whether the Government of the Territories should be carried on by a Conservative or a Grit party at Ottawa, but as to whether it is for their interests that the affairs of their country should be controlled at Ottawa at all—that is of course in matters elsewhere subject to Provincial instead of Dominion legislation. More than equal rights, with respect to the latter control, with the other Provinces which form the Dominion no one can expect, and when allowed to represent ourselves in the national assembly we are not likely to prove more obstructive than any other class. Whether the time had yet arrived when in the best interest of the Territories they should have been granted control of their own affairs, and a Legislative Council should have replaced the North West Council, as until recently an open question, nor can the people reasonably blame the Government for thinking that the time was not ripe, when half of the representatives sent up to the Council by themselves helped to vote down the attempt to present a reasonable enough "Bill of Rights" at Ottawa. There can, however, be little doubt now as to the impossibility of carrying on our affairs by a Council which will, even when more electoral districts have been added, unless the elected members can be depended upon to stick absolutely together, continue to contain an overwhelming majority whose vote will be under the direction of whatever party is in power at Ottawa. Again, it seems sufficiently obvious that the Territorial Government must have a revenue at their disposal on a very different scale from its present paltry one, and that such revenue must be at the disposal of the people's representative instead of being as hitherto absolutely under the control of the Lieut.-Governor. There has been much speculation as to why no writs have been issued for the election of new representatives to replace those whose time expired a month ago, and it now appears that the delay is caused by waiting conformation of recent legislation, which will enable the number of representatives from each electoral district to be increased in proportion to its advancing population. This reason is a good one, and consequently the delay in summoning the Council will be borne with complacency. We have not the data at hand to enable us to say when elections under the new conditions shall have taken place, how far short we will still be of the one and twenty members—attainment to which numbers will ipso facto constitute our Council a Legislative Assembly, but we think the difference will not be large. Under these circumstances we presume the people will, although with no great cheerfulness, resign themselves to patience for another couple of years, but yet we can not help expressing the opinion that that delay is really not required; nor can we imagine any more favorable opportunity for introducing the change than the present time affords, when men's feelings are strongly recoiling from rashness of action, and when they feel the serious responsibility attaching to the privilege of governing.

We have heard from Judge Rouleau his decision with regard to the site for the court house, and while of course it would be idle to expect that his Honor's selection will please all parties, we none the less think it will give as general satisfaction as any spot that could have been chosen. The site decided upon is what upon the plan of the town appears as Victoria square, and an acre of land has been presented to the Government by the Presbyterian mission, so that there will be no danger hereafter of the court house and gaol being inconveniently crowded in by other buildings. The Judge is not in a position to speak with certainty as to when the work will be proceeded with, but hopes it will soon be commenced. We are glad to hear that he has been doing his best to induce the Government to undertake as much in the way of public works as possible in order to help the people through the hard time which is before them, and rightly considers that this is not only better for all concerned than anything in the shape of direct assistance, but is much more likely to be acceptable to a people who certainly are by no means wanting in a spirit of independence.

We notice that several gentlemen have been appointed per potestatem definitum to administer the oath of office to those taking offices of various kinds, residents within the Territories. This, together with information from other sources, leads us to the belief that the fact has at last become recognized that not only is it unfair to send up men to fill every local vacancy as it occurs, but furthermore that the additional experience of the country, its resources and requirements, as well as acquaintance with the various classes of its inhabitants, render men who have resided in the Territories, and are in other respects at least the equals of those hitherto sent up, likely to do better public service.

While the Mounted Police cannot and will not wish to claim more than their share of the wretchedly arduous and dangerous work incurred in hunting down Big Bear, we are none the less glad that the final capture was made by them. We are pleased to see that public sentiment is veering round from the hastily assumed position of censuring a body of men who, while numerically insignificant, has by unflinching pluck and faithful devotion to duty prevented any outbreak for twelve years among the thousands of Indians in the Territories. It has to be remembered that the force was kept at so small a standard as to render it only possible for them to do what they have done, when supported indirectly by the settlers, and that when the settlers in numbers not only withdrew their moral support, but actually appeared in arms against the comparative handful of Police, nothing but the utmost caution upon their part could have enabled them to protect the lives of the loyal settlers until the necessary force arrived to quell a rebellion such as they were never expected or intended to cope with. Once freed from the less brilliant duty of guarding the settlers, their families and property, they have shown that none could get ahead of them in facing hardship or danger, and nothing will persuade those of us who have known them the longest and most intimately, that both officers and men would not have rejoiced to exchange their garrison duty for active service in the field.

We wonder if our public school trustees have any intention of securing a lot and putting a building thereon, so that in the event of the members of the Methodist Church desiring the building at present used for school purposes, they would not have to be turned out on the streets.
